A FASHIONABLE BRIDE.

The time appointed for the marriage ceremony in church was 3 o'clock in the afternoon. Borealis Brown, the bridegroom, and Aurora White, the bride, were n a close carriage ten blocks away, at six minutes before 3.

"We shall get there right on time," said he, looking at his watch.

Now, it is dreadfully unfashionable to go to the church promptly, and Aurora would have felt just like dropping through the floor, don't you know, if she had walked up the aisle on time. "Don't you think, my dear, it would be better to be ten minutes late ?" said she, leaning against him in a kind of a harmless

hug. "No; I pride myself on punctuality." "Five minutes, then ?" "Now, my darling, don't coax."

"Just as you say."
She put her hand carelessly on his shoulder, and then let it drop slowly along down over his coat to a small pocket in at the waist seam, where it lingered for a few

"Oh, I've made sure on that point, as I told you," he said confidently. "I slipped the ring right into this little pocket, where I—good Lord in heaven!"

"What, Borealis—what?"

"The ring is lost."

he must have left it at Aurora's residence He ordered the coachman to turn about. "What is that ?" said Aurora, pointing to the bottom of the carriage.

The ring lay glittering in the corner.

"I must have dropped it," said Borealis, picking it up, "but I swear I looked in that very spot two minutes ago."

He had looked there, as a matter of fact, incl. before August through the ring down. just before Aurora threw the ring down.
"Well," he remarked, looking at his watch again, "you will have your own way after all. We can't get to the church

DISTANCES IN SIBERIA.

A writer on Siberia in Fraser's Magazine says : Few have an idea of the dimensions of that enormous colony. I extract the following figures from Mr. Lansdell's book, giving the statistics of area and popula-

838,000 372,000

Are these totals not appalling? I confess they confuse me. But if you take a map size by cutting out the size of Germany, France, Austria, and Hungary; for there would be sufficient land still left over to of Siberia one could form some idea of its create Great Britain and Ireland out of the single province of Yeneseisk. But all that the season speeds along, and still no water enormous expanse is empty. The popula-tion of Yeneseisk is only 372 000, or about half the population of Moscow. The whole population of Siberia is less than the popt.

lation of London. Siberians do not seem distressed at these distances, and think nothing of riding 100 miles to attend a ball or a banquet ; but entertainments of that sort are only held in towns, which are very few, only seventeen having more than 5,000 inhabitants. Of course much of Siberia is not fit for colonization-the land is evidently greatly altered since the times of the mammoths and other antediluvian animals. But nevertheless there is undoubtedly a great want of population. To supply that want has been the constant thought of Russian statesmen. It is that which partly has led beria. There is a certain appropriateness about that which is quite undesigned. It is perhaps not altogether unfitting that Siberia, conquered by a half-brigand, should become the home of the convict. Yet it deserves a better fate, and it is sure to have it sooner or later-I hope sconer

In departments which have escaped these ravages the vintage was very abundant, which explains why, as already noted, the total yield for last year was 768 119 500 gallons, as compared with 579,845,000 for the year before. The Crow Indians and the Timber Thieves. The Crows are so uneasy at the presence of these lawless foragers that a rebellion against them is threatened. As the Crows have many rich lands and mineral deposits, efforts will be made in the spring to drive them off.
